Subject: too much intelligence, not enough common sense.

I heard that remark today, and it applies perfectly to the situation of the settlement of the DOJ's case against Microsoft, and the whole circus surrounding it.

Microsoft has repeatedly violated consent decrees in the past. Why should they be expected to behave this time, regardless of whatever "enforcement" regime exists.

They have violated anti-trust laws, they continue to violate anti-trust laws, and they will continue to violate anti-trust laws.

If you believe otherwise for a moment, please recuse yourself from the case.
